The Survival of the Fittest.

The lull in business caused by the good effect in that it will weed out the towns and places that never had any reason for existence. Two or three years ago it was the fashion for any man or felt so disposed, to buy a meadow or a cornfield, lay it off into blocks and lots by rapidity than elsewhere." means of streets, more or less distinctly marked, and then with flaring advertisements, brass bands or free excursions, sale at more or less ruinous rates to purchasers who, under excitement, fatuously other Birmingham, and fortune come at express speed.

* There was no thought, as has since been shown, that a summer's drought would demonstrate a lack of that prime necesneeded, nor that coal and iron might that they might be stranded in a town on one rail-road without hope of another, so that its people would simply exist by the sufferance of a corporation which did not choose to put on the screws to the killing point, nor that they could not, in periods of depression, expect anything but dullness or a cessation of lasiness, when miles, were competing with places that had those articles at their very doors, brought about by lack of foresight.

The history of Birmingham, and Chattanooga, shows that situation, natural advantages, money, work and railway competition make town-building a success in the South, but more money has been lost elsewhere in ill-advised effort than has grain will ripen and mendow grow green more places than one are so far gone heyond hope of resurrection, that they will hereafter have to be content with the station in life that is accorded a side-tract or a back number. The wisdom of the selection of Big Stone Gap is shown in its location at such a point that the trend of the walleys and the breaks in the mountains compel other (three in effect) to come here; two rivers of clear, swift-flowing water run through the town; an area of hundreds of square miles of farming land, surrounding us, that will furnish to a large industrial population, the varied agricultural producis of the temperate zone; an elevation of 1700 feet providing an atmosphere and a temperature that insuce health and the maximum of physical effectiveness ; virgin forests of hard-woods that have no superior in the United States; a peerless coking coal; an abundant supply of iron ores, some within the Dessemer-limit, with the Cranberry ores within easy reach justifying the hazari ing of the prediction that this will be the seat of the cheapest steel production in the Union.
